Wow. What a ride. It's only been three weeks since we all wrapped up in Antalya, and I'm still buzzing from the energy.

First off, a massive thank you to the 600+ attendees who made the X2 Conference 2026 an absolute blockbuster. From the packed meeting rooms to the unforgettable nights, you proved once again why this network is unmatched. The feedback has been incredible, and the momentum we built together in Turkey is already driving serious business across the globe.

Now, if you're already missing it, good news. We're heading back to Pattaya for the X2 Conference 2027, and registration opens June 15. You know how fast these spots move, so mark your calendar.

Also, next month, the X2 Projects team will be on the ground at Breakbulk Europe in Rotterdam, June 16 to 18. Let's connect, catch up, and talk about how we can take your business to the next level. Come find our X2 team at Booth 2D100, opposite the Sports Bar.

We are also looking to expand our horizons into a new specialised sector: X2 Events Logistics. If your company handles exhibition, concert, sports, or project event logistics, we want you on board to help us shape this new community. Reach out to us directly if you are interested in exploring more. Thank you for being the heartbeat of this network. Let's keep making deals and moving fast.

Thank You to All Our Booth Exhibitors

The energy on our networking floor in Antalya was incredible, and a huge part of that came down to our Booth Exhibitors.

With over 600 delegates in attendance, having a booth meant five days of great visibility and non-stop conversations. In the middle of a packed schedule of 1-on-1 meetings, these spaces gave our exhibitors the perfect spot to slow down, catch up, and turn quick introductions into real business opportunities.

Thank you to everyone who invested in a booth this year. You helped create a fantastic vibe for the whole community.

What Antalya Taught Us About the Logistics Industry

Nils Walle
CEO & Director

After several days in Antalya surrounded by nearly 700 freight forwarders from around 40 countries, one thing became very clear: Despite all the AI, automation, webinars, and “digital disruption” headlines... logistics is still a relationship business.

Because when cargo gets stuck, payments get delayed, or customers start panicking at 2AM, people still want trusted partners they actually know.

Real people still matter.

This year was also special because for the first time ever, we moved the X2 Conference outside of Thailand. Naturally, there were questions internally:

Will people travel that far?

Will the atmosphere still work?

Turns out freight forwarders will travel almost anywhere... especially if there's business opportunities and an open bar involved.

And Antalya delivered both.

What I enjoyed most was the balance: serious business during the day, genuine friendships at night. Hundreds of meetings, spontaneous conversations, old partners reconnecting, and new relationships forming everywhere around the hotel.

Not staged LinkedIn networking. Real networking. The logistics industry is changing fast, but Antalya reminded me of something important: Independent freight forwarders are still very much alive — resilient, entrepreneurial, adaptable, and still investing in relationships.

So thank you to everyone who joined us in Turkey and helped make the 11th X2 Conference one of our strongest events yet.

Now comes the important part:

Turning conversations into actual business.

Building Corporate Readiness for AI Starts at the Top

Christian Raeuber
Director

Many companies are rushing to “use AI” without realizing that successful AI adoption is not a software project. It is a cultural transformation led by management.

Across industries like logistics, finance, healthcare, manufacturing, and marketing, the companies seeing real AI results are not the ones buying the most tools. They are the ones investing consistently in people, education, and experimentation.

Corporate AI readiness starts with leadership sending a clear signal that AI matters. When management actively participates in training sessions, asks teams how AI can improve workflows, and rewards practical AI initiatives, employees begin to understand that innovation is encouraged rather than feared.

The best-performing organizations treat AI learning as an ongoing process, not a one-time seminar. Weekly learning sessions, internal workshops, department-specific use cases, and AI sharing groups create momentum over time. Staff should be encouraged to explore how AI applies directly to their roles, whether in customer service, sales, operations, HR, finance, or management.

For example, sales teams may use AI for prospecting and communication drafts. Operations departments may automate reporting and data analysis. HR teams can streamline recruitment and onboarding. Marketing teams can accelerate content creation and research. The key is making AI practical and relevant to daily work.

Another important factor is identifying internal AI champions. These are employees who are naturally curious, proactive, and willing to test new tools. Companies should support these individuals with deeper training programs and give them opportunities to mentor others inside the organization.

The organizations that will benefit most from AI over the next decade are not necessarily the biggest companies. They are the companies creating a culture of continuous learning, experimentation, and leadership-driven support from the top down.

War in the Middle East: A Regional Crisis with Global Consequences

Melvin Xavier
Director

For many around the world, the conflict in the Middle East is something watched through news alerts and social media feeds.

For those of us living here in Dubai, it feels far more personal.

Over the past couple of months, we have lived through uncertainty that many outside the region may struggle to fully understand. Conversations at dinner tables have changed. Parents are thinking about their children differently. Businesses are operating with caution. Flights have been disrupted, trade has slowed, and every day seems to bring a new headline that impacts confidence across the region.

As someone working in logistics and supply chain, I am witnessing these effects in real time.

The Middle East is one of the world's most important trade corridors, and when instability touches this region, the ripple effects are global.

Shipping routes become unpredictable, air freight capacity tightens, costs rise, and supply chains built for efficiency suddenly face serious pressure.

Here in Dubai, many companies connected to trade and logistics are navigating difficult conditions. Some businesses are delaying decisions. Cash flow is becoming tighter. Customers are asking for longer credit terms. Freight is moving slower and at higher cost.

And yet, despite all this, there is still resilience.

What continues to inspire me is how people and businesses adapt during difficult moments. Freight forwarders across our region are finding alternative solutions every single day..rerouting cargo, managing disruptions, communicating transparently with customers, and continuing to keep trade moving despite enormous challenges.

And while conflict brings undeniable hardship, it also creates opportunity for those prepared to adapt. New trade routes emerge. Businesses rethink supply chains. Customers value reliability more than ever before.

Living in the center of this situation has reminded me of something important: resilience is not built during easy times. It is revealed during difficult ones.

And despite the uncertainty around us, I remain optimistic..for our region, for our industry, and for the power of global partnerships to overcome even the most challenging periods.

M'Ocean Logistics Executes Multi-Stage Project Cargo Move From Europe To North America

M'Ocean Logistics has completed a complex project cargo movement covering Germany, Belgium, the United States, and Canada, managing the transport of heavy and sensitive units under a tightly coordinated schedule.

The cargo was collected in Southern Germany, moved to the export terminal in Belgium, and shipped via RoRo on 40ft MAFI trailers to Baltimore, USA, before final delivery to Laval, Quebec, Canada. The shipment comprised three units, including two large crates with significant weight and dimensional constraints, requiring careful planning around load distribution and lifting operations.

Due to the extreme point load and cargo characteristics, container transport was ruled out following technical evaluation. The movement was executed using direct crane loading and RoRo equipment to ensure stability, safety, and adherence to the customer's urgent timeline.

A clear example of project logistics driven by engineering assessment, risk control, and disciplined execution.

Congratulations to Jan-Moritz Höler and the M'Ocean Logistics team on the successful delivery of this multi-stage project movement.

Member Nomination: Cargo Line Nominates CSC Transport Limited For Breakbulk Transformer Project To Cameroon

We are excited to announce a successful nomination from Cargo Line to CSC Transport Limited after completing a complex breakbulk shipment from Taicang, China to Douala, Cameroon.

This shipment involved two oil-type transformers (50 MVA, 110/33 kV), each weighing around 52 metric tons, totaling over 104 MT. Handling such cargo required meticulous coordination in origin handling, vessel planning, and project timelines.

CSC Transport Limited managed the project at origin under EXW terms in Taicang, preparing and handling the heavy transformers before export. Cargo Line then took charge of the ocean freight and destination arrangements to Douala.

The shipment demanded specialized heavy-lift handling, breakbulk planning, and precise collaboration among all parties to ensure safe positioning, secure loading, and readiness for transport.

Kudos to the teams at Cargo Line and CSC Transport Limited for their excellent coordination and execution on this project.
